Subscribe

Ontario activist gave water to p...

Canadian Jamal Murray

confident...

Login

13 °CA few clouds

Wheels Video Opinions Business Arts & Life Community More Home News Sports Homes Careers World News Columns NOW! Nova Scotia Nova Scotia Canada Breaking News Sign-up Metro Cape Breton

List of 5 questions for patients to ask about medications aimed at protecting health THE CANADIAN PRESS Published March 9, 2016 - 7:23pm Last Updated March 9, 2016 - 10:10pm

Martha Dawn Murrau TORONTO — Trying to keep track of medications can be one of the most challenging aspects of health care for patients, especially when they receive multiple prescriptions from a number of doctors for a variety of conditions.

To help Canadians navigate the various pharmaceuticals in their medicine cabinets, a coalition of patient safety organizations has developed a checklist of five questions that patients should raise with their physicians to make sure they don't unwittingly put themselves in harm's way.

"Lots of times, people just don't hear what's being said or forget about it," said Chris Power, CEO interacts with another, and whether that could lead to a serious adverse event — including death.

But it's not only knowing when and how to take their drugs, but also whether one medicine

The 2004 Canadian Adverse Events Study found drug or IV fluid-related events were the second most common type of adverse events in Canadian hospitals, accounting for almost 24 per cent of the total. More than half of Canadians regularly use prescription drugs, with 36 per cent taking Power said patients often assume the health provider "knows best" and they don't question the combination of drugs they've been prescribed or whether they need to continue taking a two or more medications, according to a 2014 Health Council of Canada report.

"They're on so many medications, they don't even know the names of them," she said from particular medication. "They just take what's being prescribed for them," she said.

"So what we're trying to do is heighten awareness and really have patients and families start to take a little more control over their health care, to understand what medications they're on and understand what the medication is doing for them or not doing for them, and any

That means carrying their list of drugs to all medical appointments, along with this checklist of five — Have any medications been added, stopped or changed, and why?

questions to pose to their doctor or other care provider:

interactions."

multiple health issues.

of the Canadian Patient Safety Institute (CPSI).

Ottawa. "They'll call them the pink pill or the white pill."

— What medications do I need to keep taking, and why? — How do I take my medications and for how long?

— How will I know if my medication is working, and what side-effects do I watch for?

The checklist was inspired by Toronto pharmacist Emily Musing, who had created a set of

— Do I need any tests and when do I book my next visit?

providers could leave him feeling perplexed.

which he needed regular dialysis, before his death two years ago. While describing her dad as a very positive and independent person, she said the number of said of her father, who had been dealing with diabetes, high blood pressure and kidney failure, for questions for her father when he was in his mid-80s and seeing several different specialists for

"Because of that, he was on a whole list of medications. I think it was up to 15 or 20," Musing medications he was taking and the numerous interactions he had with different health-care ask them?" said Musing, who's executive director of pharmacy, clinical risk and quality at Toronto's University Health Network.

For instance, changing the dosage of one drug or switching to another in the same class matter, as drugs are metabolized through the kidneys, she said.

could alter the effects of another medication, making it potentially ineffective or even toxic. In

"He was often saying to me, 'You know, Emily, this is very confusing to me. I'm not sure what it is they already know. What do I need to tell them about my medications? And what do I need to

"It really gave him the words to actually ask those questions and to start the conversation," she said of the tip sheet she created for him. "It helped him because he felt more in control ... he wanted to be part of the conversation and decision-making process."

patients with renal disease like her father, balancing many medications at once can be a delicate Maryann Murray wishes such a checklist had existed for her daughter Martha, who died in 2002 at age 22 after taking a medication for bipolar disorder that she shouldn't have been prescribed.

"She was put on lithium and she didn't know that there was a warning in her file that she shouldn't

"This sort of thing really helped my dad and I think it would help any other patient."

be put on that drug," Murray said from her home in Carlisle, Ont., near Hamilton.

"They increased the dosage and 13 days later her heart stopped."

you're telling the medical people you need to answer these questions.

to know about was that the drug could potentially cause or worsen a heart arrhythmia. "These kinds of things are preventable and I think we can do better," said Murray, adding that

Murray said she's sure the physician, who pointed out possible side-effects from lithium like dry mouth and weight gain, was trying to help her daughter. But the one adverse effect she needed need to know that it's their responsibility to pass on the information," she said. "I think with the questions, you're not only telling people it's OK to ask these questions,

Sheryl Ubelacker, The Canadian Press This Week's Flyers

HOVER FOR FLYER

MIN AUTO PARTS

HOVER FOR FLYER

Business Sports Arts & Life Travel Books Movies The Nova Scotian

Community Community News

Sports Columns Arts & Life Columns Editorial Cartoon

Announcements

Wheels Wheels Search Dealers Wheels News Wheels Video Contact us to place an

Cream Careers

Sell Your Vehicle

Newspaper Today's E-Paper Classifieds

COMING SOON

FLU

SHOT

Business Insider Signup About the Herald About Us Contact Us Career Opportunities F.A.Q

Library Services

Recipes for Trailer Park Boys-inspired drinks look 'dangerous': Ont. premier Ecofiscal commission report says its time to drop costly biofuels subsidies Mexican officials say suspect arrested in death of

Federal government announces new measures intended to reduce housing market risk for exotic pets has experts worried

Canadian artist

for continuing court case

Top Stories in Canada

offences involved cadets

selection of quotes

by 2022, Trudeau says

Military reviews training as figures show many sex

Trudeau's carbon price plan praised, denounced:

National carbon price to be $10 a tonne in 2018, $50

PHOTOS: Drawn to the wild! Canada's growing love

Mothers denied sickness benefits call out Liberals

Dion denounces Russian support for attacks on Syrian medical facilities

It also helped the doctors, nurses and pharmacists he was dealing with, Musing added, because the questions were phrased in such a way that the health professionals understood what he was asking and could respond to him in language that was understandable for him.

"She had rapid heartbeats, and the local doctor said it must be panic attacks because if you have one psych diagnosis, they think it's all connected.

being armed with the five questions will help patients protect themselves. "Not only do people need to feel empowered about their own health care, but the medical people

Follow @SherylUbelacker on Twitter.

Rexall

"I think those five questions will save people from harm and they'll save some lives."

Metro Columnists Nova Scotia News Columns Canada Business Columns World

Obituaries Births Cards In Memoriam Milestones Announcement

Careers

Multimedia

Community Photos

Videos

HOVER FOR FLYER

Rexall

Circulation Herald in Education Program Become a Chronicle Herald Retailer Subscribe

Ad Specs Local Businesses Pay Your Account

Advertising Media Kit

Advertising

Clients

Advertising Sales

Print Upload Real Estate Portal Ad Specs

Crossword Lotteries

Fun & Games

Sudoku Contests

Lotteries Weather What's Happening TV Listings

Headline Promotions Navigate Nova Scotia Manage your Account

Useful Information

Herald Shop

Mobile Apps

Horoscope

Weekly Flyers

Herald Archive

Copyright

N.S. Highway Cams

🛂 (in) 🖸

Privacy Policy Terms of Use

READ MORE »

Up Next in Atlantic Hurricane Season